Q.1 - Short Questions - Solved

Question 1: Generic Principles of Social Service

> Definition: Generic principles of Social Service are the basic guiding rules that every social worker follows while helping an individual, group or community, no matter which specific field they work in.

- Acceptance: accepting the client as they are, without judging their background or mistakes.
- Individualization: treating every person as unique, since no two problems or people are exactly the same.
- Non-judgmental Attitude: not blaming or criticizing the client for their situation.
- Confidentiality: keeping the client's personal information private and safe.
- Self-Determination: letting the client make their own decisions and choices about their life.
- Participation: involving the client actively in solving their own problem, not just doing everything for them.
- Respect for Human Dignity: treating every person with worth and respect, regardless of their status.

Question 2: Two Fields of Social Service

Definition: A field of Social Service is a specific area or setting where trained social workers apply their skills to help a particular group of people.

1. Medical Social Work: This field works inside hospitals and clinics. The social worker helps patients and their families deal with the emotional, financial and social problems caused by illness, such as arranging financial help for treatment or counseling a family after a serious diagnosis.

2. Child Welfare: This field focuses on protecting and supporting children, especially orphans, street children or children facing abuse and neglect. Social workers in this field arrange shelter, education, foster care and legal protection for such children.

Question 3: Services of APWA (All Pakistan Women's Association)

Definition: APWA is one of the oldest and largest women's welfare organizations in Pakistan, founded in 1949 by Begum Rana Liaquat Ali Khan, working for the social, economic and educational uplift of women and children.

- Running schools and vocational training centers to educate girls and women.
- Providing healthcare and family planning services through clinics and maternity homes.
- Running orphanages and homes for destitute and homeless women.
- Offering legal aid and awareness on women's rights.
- Running industrial homes where women learn skills like sewing and embroidery to earn a livelihood.
- Working for child welfare, including immunization and nutrition programs.

Question 4: Key Characteristics of a Social Worker

- Empathy: the ability to understand and feel what the client is going through.

- Patience: staying calm and supportive even when progress is slow.
- Good Communication Skills: listening carefully and explaining things clearly.
- Non-judgmental Nature: not looking down on clients because of their situation.
- Confidentiality and Trustworthiness: keeping client information private.
- Cultural Sensitivity: respecting the client's beliefs, traditions and background.
- Problem-Solving Ability: finding practical solutions suited to the client's real situation.
- Ethical Integrity: following professional values honestly at all times.

Question 5: Role of Norms and Values in Social Service

> Definition: Norms are the accepted rules of behavior in a society, and values are the beliefs a society or profession considers important, such as honesty, justice and respect.

Norms and values guide how a social worker behaves and makes decisions. Social values like human dignity, justice, equality and service to humanity form the ethical foundation of the whole profession, reminding the social worker why the work matters. Social norms help the worker understand what is acceptable or unacceptable within a particular community, so that the help offered fits the culture and traditions of the people being served, instead of clashing with them. Together, norms and values keep social service work respectful, fair and effective, and stop workers from imposing their own personal beliefs on clients.

Question 6: Key Areas of ICT for Social Work

> Definition: ICT (Information and Communication Technology) refers to tools like computers, the internet and mobile apps that can support and improve social work practice.

- Case Management Software: keeping digital records of clients and their progress.

- Online Counseling and Teletherapy: providing support to clients remotely through video or chat.
- Social Media Awareness Campaigns: spreading awareness on issues like child abuse or health.
- E-Learning and Training: training social workers online with courses and webinars.
- Data Collection and Research: using digital surveys to study social problems.
- GIS Mapping: mapping vulnerable communities to plan better relief and services.
- Disaster Response Coordination: using apps and databases to coordinate emergency relief efforts.

Q.2 - Long Questions - Solved

Question 1: The Philosophical Base of Social Service

> Definition: The philosophical base of social service means the set of core beliefs and values about human beings and society that explain why social service exists and why it is considered important.

The philosophy of social service rests on several core beliefs.

1. Belief in Human Dignity and Worth: every human being, regardless of caste, religion, wealth or status, has inherent worth and deserves to be treated with respect and dignity.

2. Right to Self-Determination: every individual has the right to make their own choices and decisions about their own life, and the social worker's role is to support, not control, this choice.

3. Social Justice and Equality: society should treat all its members fairly, and social service works to reduce inequality, discrimination and injustice faced by weaker groups.

4. Mutual Responsibility: individuals and society are interdependent; a healthy society has a responsibility to help its struggling members, and helped individuals in turn contribute back to society.

5. Human Perfectibility: people are capable of growth, change and improvement if they are given the right support, opportunity and environment.

6. Religious and Ethical Traditions: concepts of charity, compassion and helping the needy (such as Zakat and Sadaqah in Islam) have deeply influenced the philosophy of organized social service.

7. Democratic Values: social service believes in the participation of people in decisions that affect their own lives, similar to democratic principles.

Together, these beliefs form the foundation that convinces society that helping the vulnerable, the poor and the suffering is not just kindness, but a moral and social duty.

Question 2: Main Social Problems of Pakistan (At Least Three in Detail)

List of main social problems in Pakistan: Poverty, Illiteracy, Unemployment, Rapid Population Growth, Poor Health Facilities, Corruption, Gender Inequality, Child Labor, Terrorism and Extremism, Drug Addiction, Environmental Degradation, and Housing Shortage.

1. Poverty: A large section of Pakistan's population lives below the poverty line, unable to meet basic needs like food, clean water, shelter and healthcare. Poverty is caused by unemployment, low wages, inflation and unequal distribution of resources.

It leads to malnutrition, poor education and increases the risk of child labor and crime.

2. Illiteracy: A significant percentage of Pakistan's population, especially in rural areas and among girls, remains uneducated. This is caused by poverty, lack of schools, cultural restrictions and poor quality of existing education. Illiteracy limits people's job opportunities, keeps families trapped in poverty, and slows down the overall development of the country.

3. Unemployment: A growing number of educated and uneducated youth are unable to find suitable jobs, due to slow economic growth, lack of industrial development and a mismatch between education and market needs. Unemployment increases poverty, frustration among youth, and can push some individuals toward crime or extremism.

4. Rapid Population Growth (additional problem): Pakistan's population is growing faster than its resources and services can support, putting pressure on schools, hospitals, housing and jobs, which worsens almost every other social problem listed above.

Question 3: Role of the World Health Organization (WHO)

> Definition: The World Health Organization (WHO) is a specialized health agency of the United Nations, established in 1948, responsible for guiding and coordinating international public health efforts.

- Setting Health Standards: WHO develops international guidelines and standards for medicines, vaccines and health practices that countries follow.
- Disease Surveillance and Control: WHO monitors and responds to outbreaks of diseases across the world, and led major achievements like the global eradication of smallpox and major progress against polio.

- Technical Assistance: WHO provides expert advice and support to developing countries, including Pakistan, to strengthen their health systems.
- Emergency Health Response: WHO coordinates the global response during health emergencies, such as pandemics and natural disasters.
- Immunization Programs: WHO runs and supports large-scale vaccination campaigns, such as the Polio Eradication Program active in Pakistan.
- Maternal and Child Health: WHO works to reduce mother and child deaths through better healthcare access and nutrition programs.
- Health Research and Data: WHO collects global health data and funds research on diseases, helping countries plan better health policies.
- Promoting Universal Health Coverage: WHO advocates for every person's right to access basic healthcare, regardless of their income.

Through these roles, WHO plays a central part in improving health outcomes worldwide, and its work directly supports the goals of social service by protecting the wellbeing of vulnerable populations.
